Rich Dogs Don't Worry Over Muzzling Order; Poor Ones The Real Sufferers

By ALDEN A. EVANS

A MUZZLING order doesn't bother the rich dog any more than the prohibition in a bar bothers the rich man, but it works a hardship on the poor, sometimes, just like a lot of other laws.

The pretty collie dog is given his ham and eggs and dog biscuit and gets on a couch in the house and is cared for like the baby. He doesn't have to be muzzled. The ugly air-dale, that some persons say is smart, is petted and pampered and fed fine meat and stays in his master's automobile. A muzzling law doesn't bother him. The husky's nose never gets around his work.

But it is a different proposition with the poor dog, that the common dog, which is also a friend to man, and with the little "gutter" dog, the friend of the poor boy or girl.

In an alley next to the courthouse Saturday morning there was a scruffy yellow dog. It was some small boy's pet because it had on a muzzle but it was a rough sort of muzzle made out of piece of cord like you tie a ham or a heavy sack with.

The dog had found in the gutter

what it hoped would be its breakfast. A half cooked steak bone. It was trying its best to get the bone to its mouth with its paw. But nothing doing. The muzzle was too tight.

A boy in the other end of the alley saw the dog. He came up the alley, and the dog started to leave the bone. The boy snatched his finger and called "Back puppy, back puppy," and the dog came to him wagging its flea bitten tail. The boy picked up the dog with one hand and reached for the bone with the other. Then he called "Back, back, back, back," and the dog came back and the two boys sat down on their heels and untied the muzzle, threw it aside, and struck the dog's scruffy sides as it growled at the boy.

The growler against muzzled dogs will continue indefinitely, perhaps three or four weeks longer, at least, following the report of Dan Doan, city dog catcher, saying he had killed three mad dogs this week. Doan caught 63 dogs this week and killed 42 of them. He caught 31 last week and 24 were released and 25 killed. Owners have released 25 dogs this week. Fifty cents and a muzzle will get a dog out of the pound after it has been lashed.

SALT LAKE MAN ARRESTED BY FEDERAL OFFICERS HERE.

Two arrest warrants at the request of federal officers at Salt Lake, where charges are said to have been filed against Brown, alleging possession of counterfeit stamps. Brown waived preliminary, was placed under $10,000 bond which he did not furnish, and is held pending the arrival of an officer from Utah.
